

Foundations of Biological and Fisheries Oceanography

The fields of Biological Oceanography and Fisheries Oceanography have a common background and early history. Significant research contributions and a diversity of approaches have shaped these fields. Many of the foundation concepts also derive from the field of ecology. This course will survey the historical development of critical concepts in these fields and examine recent papers that challenge established concepts or identify promising directions for future research.